Ashland and Defiance, two localities sort of isolated and off the beaten tracks of traffic, will represent the great northwest in the basketball finals at Columbus this week-end, returns from the district tourney at Findlay attesting to this pronounced and startling fact.

Ashland stepped into the state finals over the prone forms of the noted Longfellows from Fremont while Defiance, uncurried dark horse in the entire class A proceedings, elbows into the final scene by defeating cocky Scott High of Toledo. Ashland, by reason of its steady performance in the North Central League this season and some notable victories on the outside, was considered a real factor in the big tourney but, Defiance, never considered as a prize taker along the big line, just elbowed its way into the picture and the boys from that staid county seat will enjoy a ride to Columbus to rub shoulders with the scholastic cage class of the

Both teams, by the their Findlay earnings to their star centers, Thomas of Ashland, and Tircle, of Defiance, both giants, clever floormen, exponents of the pivot play and basket makers from way back.

Ashland defeated Fremont 28 to 23 after a stirring duel Saturday afternoon and Defiance downed Scott in fairly easy fashion, 23 to 17 on the evening's final card.

Rossford High and Margaretta, of Castalia, won their ends of the class B brackets and also line up for a trek to Columbus. Rossford won its final encounter, defeating walk, in a stirring session, 18 to 17. How Ashland Won

Two big quarters, the second and third, gave Ashland a commanding lead and won for them the coveted title, although the Oldfather machine, victors over Bucyrus and Wauseon, made a desperate rally in the final round and came within five points of knotting the count.
